The Humanists of Florida Association (HFA) 2008 Conference was held last month, May 9-11, in Sarasota, Florida. I attended the conference with our Treasurer Mark Renwick and our Vice President Carrie Renwick. The event was fantastic—it exceeded my expectations by orders of magnitude, in more ways than I could have imagined. The conference was co-sponsored by the Congregation for Humanistic Judaism, the Humanists of Sarasota Bay, and the Gulf Coast Humanist Association.

The three of us carpooled down to Sarasota. We started our adventure around 1:30 Friday afternoon, arriving in Sarasota at 5:30. What should have been a hot, cumbersome, four reception where we spoke with a great number of officers, members, and friends of the HFA, including one of our greatest friends and long-time FCFS member and supporter, Dennis Deshaies. The opportunity to converse with great minds was there—and we took full advantage—picking the brains of some immensely great thinkers.

ference attendees, giving us an overview of what would follow. The theme of the conference, as stated in its literature, was designed to provide a pathway to the future for those of us who share a common Humanist philosophy and want to work together to best utilize our talents and energies to tangibly affect the quality of life in Florida.

Jerry said the theme of the conference was "Evolving Humanism: An Agenda for The Future," but it was clear that the creators of this event were thinking beyond humanism, beyond Florida: They were thinking globally.

Jerry announced the formation of an evolutionary think tank. Yes, you heard that right, an evolutionary think tank—the first of its kind—developed right here in the State of Florida! The HFA will be the founding sponsor, calling the project, "Evolving the Future: Toward a Science of Cultural Change." The HFA will be convening a team of scientists later this year to define and shape the think tank which will be heavily involved in contemporary multi-group evolutionary theory.

The evolutionary think tank will be under the direction of Dr. David Sloan Wilson, the keynote conference speaker and groundbreaking evolutionary biologist, who publishes in anthropology, psychology, and philosophy in addition to his biological research.

Dr. Wilson presented a powerful lecture on group (multi-level) selection in evolution, which suggests that evolution can be applied to everyday affairs. From a biological standpoint, his thesis isn't exactly extraordinary and he freely admits it, quoting geneticist Theodosius Dobzhansky who said that nothing in biology makes sense except in the light of evolution.

Carrie, Dennis, Earl, and Mark in Sara-

Fortunately, Wilson doesn't stop there, but merely uses Dobzhansky as a stepping stone for his Multilevel Selection Theory. Wilson states, "This grand synthesis (biology makes no sense without evolution) did not include our understanding of humanity, however. An intellectual apartheid has confined evolutionary theory to biology and a few related human subjects for most of the 20th century. Most policy makers are completely ignorant of evolutionary theory. Worse, most people who advise policy makers within academic fields such as economics, political science, business, law, management, education, and even the health sciences are also ignorant of evolutionary theory because it has not been part of their disciplinary training."

That is where it gets controversial, because Wilson seems to argue that while genes serve as the pathway for an organism's design to be transmitted across generations, individuals and groups are the carriers for those genes and both—not just the individual—are the stage upon which genes do what they do.

I would have hated to follow that lecture, but Alan Grindal, M.D., of Sarasota did a great job with his presentation, "The Neurobiology of Human Spirituality." Dr. Grindal literally dissected the brain right in front of us (with the help of PowerPoint). It was an enlightening talk about the human brain and the mechanical processes that shape human thought.

After lunch, we heard from Bill Newton, Executive Director of the Florida Consumer Action Network. He spoke on health care, the environment, insurance, and additional matters of equal importance to humanists and the population at large.

We then heard from Alan Charney, Program Director for USAction, on how to advance a progressive agenda for change in 2009 and further into the future. His lecture was attention-grabbing and compelling. He had a very thorough command of the history of grass-roots change. I was moved by his speech.

Next was feminist mythologist and author, Barbara G. Walker who spoke on “Death: A Humanist Overview,” which was a fascinating look at the many cultural aspects of death and dying. She is the author of the 1100-page Woman’s Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets. To round out our Saturday, we heard from Ronald A. Lindsay, Vice President and General Council for the Center For Inquiry. Lindsay spoke about the legal history of state-church relationships.

The highlight of Saturday evening’s banquet was the presentation of HFA’s “2008 Humanist of the Year” award to Nadine Smith, founder and executive director of Equality Florida.

Sunday morning ended the conference with talks on starting a Camp Quest in Florida and the celebration of Darwin Day, by Elizabeth Spike; “An Educational Vision for Florida’s Children” by Ralph Argen; and then a speakers’ panel that included David Sloan Wilson, Ron Lindsay, and Alan Charney.

The conference was great, and I have to give praise and honor to the HFA for having the vision to sponsor such a wonderful event. I want to encourage all of our members and friends to join the Humanists of Florida Association. <http://www.floridahumanist.org/>. This organization has been doing great things in our state and is now branching out into our country! Please give them your support.

I also want to encourage our members to attend more conferences. We need to get together a committee on how to car-pool, share rooms (if necessary), and do what we can to reduce the costs, so that as many of our members as possible can attend these brain-teasing, thought provoking events.

NPR Corporate Sponsorship 2008 - SUCCESS!!

Carrie Renwick

I am thrilled to report that we have exceeded our goal of $4,095! A trip to the post office box yesterday (Saturday, June 7) brought the total to $4,090.50, but several online contributions since then have brought today’s total to $4,165.50. WOW!

But should further contributions designated for NPR come in, don’t worry that we’ll get too much money! Any further contributions will be gratefully appreciated and will be earmarked for the ongoing NPR Corporate Sponsorship Fund.

Many thanks to our loyal supporters who are keeping the FCFS the powerful voice of reason that Florida’s First Coast so desperately needs!

Bible Park USA

Sigrun Buckley

A developer wants to build what would be the country's largest Bible-based theme park in Tennessee, a $200 million, 280-acre, Bible Park USA project that would bring in much-needed revenue to Rutherford County.

Enterprising televangelists and church founders have been known to make money from believers and followers. So is this going to be yet another tacky approach to commercially exploit religious beliefs? That's not what the project's developer, Bar-Tur, is going for.

"There's a lot of people who would like to go on a trip to the Holy Lands," he says, "but only a small percentage do, and that's because of time, money and fear." He continues, "The idea is that people could come to the park and see a lot of similar ideas and recreations that you would see." Unlike smaller religious attractions, the park would focus on the historical aspects of the Bible—not on ministry.

Rather than roller coasters, picture actors working in a Galilean village. That part is easy to reenact. Instead of a waterslide, the project's developer envisages an indoor exhibit on the parting of the Red Sea with water shooting into the air and the booming voice of Moses raining down.

There lies the crunch. The layer of historical evidence will be rather slim. What I remember from my Old Testament Exegesis classes (back in the day when I studied for my Masters in Catholic Theology), this miracle was explained as a natural occurrence of low tides, drought, and rising waters. Scientific explanations of the universe have made ancient mythologies redundant. Many miraculous biblical incidents derive from ancient heathen fables and folklore that have been adopted and formed into ongoing, prevailing religious beliefs. Yet the churches continue to lay claim to the literary correctness of the words of the scriptures, because their writers were inspired by God.

What the country needs more are science museums in many states and science standards in Florida's classrooms ...

Another example for perpetuated misconstruing is the story of Adam and Eve, who to their eternal shame, ate from the forbidden apple. A translation mistake that occurred when the Old Testament was translated into Latin is still falsely interpreted. The scribes wrote "malus" (i.e., Latin for apple) instead of "malum" (i.e., evil) which makes more sense. Even a freethinker understands that man should refrain from tasting (touching) evil instead of the obscure commandment not to eat an apple.

Perhaps the faithful and faith needing will flock to the park and have their faith reinforced, but some will no doubt realize the hollowness that a modern replica of scenes of supernatural myths represents. What the country needs more are science museums in many states and science standards in Florida's classrooms, something the FCFS has been fighting for.

The FCFS offers a forum for secular humanists and free-thinkers to voice their opinions among both the locals and Diaspora in the South. It invites those who question the existing religious authorities around us. It provides a community for like-minded individuals who see themselves as unchurched, i.e., who no longer identify with a church they once belonged to.

A Pew Forum recorded in a February 2008 survey that Americans are changing their religion or abandoning the belief they were raised in. Hopefully, this is part of a secularization process such as the one currently underway in Europe and not just a switch in consumer products.

Social justice, civic virtues, personal freedom, and happiness in an open pluralistic society are topics that humanists and free-thinkers are firmly committed to religious beliefs. Therein lies the challenge and opportunity for humankind to go forward.

The Florida Legislature and Freethinkers—So, How Did We Do?

Curtis Wolf

Now that the 2008 Florida legislature has completed its session, let's find out how the bills listed in my March 2008 article "Bills Before The 2008 Florida Legislature About Which Freethinkers Should Know" fared. Of the eleven bills that I wrote about, only one of them was adopted by both houses. That bill was HR 9021 which recognizes April 9, 2008 as "Osteopathic Medicine Day." Whether you like osteopathic medicine or not, this resolution will have little practical effect on public policy.

Also, even though HB 401 ("I Believe" License Plates) died in committee, CS/SB 734 which authorizes license plates with the "In God We Trust" message on them were approved by the Governor. On step forward, two steps back!

As noted in last month's column, the academic freedom bills (HB 1483 and SB 2692) failed due to the inability of their supporters to agree on how to undermine the teaching of evolution in public schools. It is assured that these bills will be back next year and will likely pass if their supporters can get their act together.

Unfortunately, this is what happens in a politically-driven school system rather than a market-driven school system. As long we continue this one-size-fits-all, publicly-funded school monopoly, we may as well get used to seeing these squabbles over science standards and evolution rear their ugly heads in the Florida Legislature every year.

Letter from a Reader - Olive Garden

May 28, 2008

Earl, congratulations! Last night's dinner was terrific! Great location, good room with good acoustics that kept the noise level tolerable, our meal was delicious, and the event was quite convivial, as usual. From my perspective, you did a great job finding the right drinking and eating place for the FCFS. No more suggestions will come from me. Way to go! —Herb Gerson, FCFS member

Out of the Mouths of Babes!

Turned Into...

The Sunday School teacher was describing how Lot's wife looked back and turned into a pillar of salt when little Jason piped up, "My Mommy looked back once while she was driving," he announced triumphantly, "and she turned into a telephone pole!"

Good Samaritan

A Sunday school teacher was telling her class the story of the Good Samaritan. She asked the class, "If you saw a person lying on the roadside, all wounded and bleeding, what would you do?" A thoughtful little girl broke the hushed silence. "I think I'd throw up."

Did Noah Fish?

A Sunday school teacher asked, "Johnny, do you think Noah did a lot of fishing when he was on the Ark?" "No," replied Johnny. "How could he with just two worms?"

Higher Power

A Sunday school teacher said to her children, "We have been learning how powerful kings and queens were in Bible times. But, there is a Higher Power. Can anybody tell me what it is?" One child blurted out, "Aces!"

Moses And The Red Sea

Nine-year-old Joey was asked by his mother what he had learned in Sunday School. "Well, Mom, our teacher told us how God sent Moses behind enemy lines on a rescue mission to lead the Israelites out of Egypt. When he got to the Red Sea, he had his army build a pontoon bridge and all the people walked across safely. Then he radioed headquarters for reinforcements. They sent bombers to blow up the bridge and all the Israelites were saved." "Now, Joey, is that really what your teacher taught you?", his mother asked. "Well, no, Mom. But, if I told it the way the teacher did, you'd never believe it!"

Being Thankful

A Rabbi said to a precocious six-year-old boy, "So your mother says your prayers for you each night? That's very commendable. What does she say?" The little boy replied, "Thank God he's in bed!"

Marching Over The Constitution

Fred W. Hill

The harsh, metallic clang of trash can lids banging brought us to consciousness at 3:30 a.m. sharp. Bleary-eyed, we stumbled out of our bunks as we were called to attention in a new reality. Some of us were barely out of high school, others, like myself, had been out for years and been through varied educational and career paths which, for a multitude of reasons, led us all to the Recruit Training Center in Orlando, Florida, where we would be transformed from civilians into sailors. Upon the commencement of our enlistments, we had each taken an oath, “to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to regulations and the Uniform Code of Military Justice. So help me God.”

To be frank, that last phrase didn’t audibly pass my lips. Swearing to God felt meaningless to me, yet I wasn’t brassy enough to take a freethinking stand over a few silly words. Oh, I took the part about supporting and defending the Constitution seriously enough, and I understood the responsibility I was undertaking. However, I also knew that while doing my part to uphold the U.S. Constitution and defend the country as a member of the U.S. Navy may require me to keep my hair short, march in step on occasion, and do 60 push-ups on demand, I was not beholden to express belief in any god. I was joining in the defense of a constitutional federal republic, after all, not a theocracy, even if my Commander-in-Chief at the time, George H. W. Bush, once asserted, “No, I don’t know that atheists should be considered as citizens, nor should they be considered as patriots. This is one nation under God.” See (http://www.positiveatheism.org/hist/quotes/scar_b.htm)

Nevertheless, during my nearly 8 years of service, during which I earned two achievement

By their subsequent actions to undermine religious freedom they have shown contempt for the U.S. Constitution ...

medals and an honorable discharge despite my godlessness, I didn’t encounter much overt proselytizing. True, I didn’t advertise my atheism, but neither did I keep it a closely guarded secret. The sailors and officers that I got to know were of various faiths. Several made a big display of their devotion to Jesus.

At least a few were freethinkers like myself. One shipmate told me he was a Mormon after I’d made derogatory remarks about that sect’s tenets during a friendly discussion about beliefs. He was initially defensive but admitted that he wasn’t an active member and did not know much about the origins of his family’s nominal faith.

He was representative of many others I knew, who claimed belief in God but apparently only due to enculturation – they had adopted religious beliefs as their own without ever giving them much thought. The beliefs were what their family, friends, and other people they grew up with accepted as normal. Still, no one ever told me I would go to Hell or otherwise got in my face due to my lack of belief in god during my Naval career. The military culture tends to frown on non-conformists, yet I escaped hazing despite not being entirely in step.

Alas, not all uniformed freethinkers and adherents of minority faiths have been so fortunate. As exemplified by the elder Bush’s quote, religious bigotry haunts the U.S. Military at all levels. Here are a few examples:

General William Boykin dressed in combat gear while speaking to evangelical groups in 2003 on the dangers of Islam, which he equates with Satanism, and berated the “godless” courts of his own nation for upholding the Constitution. Further, he described his task, while deployed in Muslim nations such as Somalia and Iraq as a United States Army commanding officer, was not “simply to defeat an enemy force, but to carry Jesus to the benighted.” (Garry Wills, A Country Ruled by Faith, New York Review of Books, 11/16/06 <http://www.nybooks.com/articles/19590#fn37>). Boykin was defended by Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld and retained in his position until he retired.

On the other hand, when Chaplain Don Larsen applied to become the first U.S. military Wiccan chaplain, after his previous Pentecostal faith withered away in the wake of witnessing the carnage in Iraq, he was not only denied but kicked out of the Chaplain corps despite an unblemished service record (Alan Cooperman, “A Wiccan Army Chaplain? The Brass Wouldn’t Buy It,” Seattle Times, 2/24/07).

U.S. Army Specialist Jeremy Hall, who also lost his prior faith while serving in the U.S. Army, was berated by Major Freddy J. Welborn, who disrupted a meeting of atheists that Hall had organized in 2007 at Camp Speicher, near Tikrit, Iraq, exclaiming, “People like you are not holding up the Constitution and are going against what the founding fathers, who were Christians, wanted for America!” (Neela Banerjee, “Soldier Sues Army, Saying His Atheism Led to Threats,” New York Times, 4/26/08). Welborn also threatened to bar Hall and other atheists from re-enlistment and bring charges against them merely because they publicly expressed disbelief in his god.

Former Air Force officer and Judge Advocate General Michael Weinstein nearly nipped his sterling military career in the bud when, as a cadet at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colorado, in 1973, after having endured much harassment and physical assaults by anti-Semitic classmates, he knocked out an investigating officer who accused him of writing threatening letters to himself (Keith Taylor, “Our (Soon to Be) Sectarian Air Force,” Free Inquiry, Feb./March 2008).

Lt. Gen. William G Boykin

Thanks to the involvement of the Anti-Defamation League, no charges were brought against Weinstein, the attacks on him ceased, and he completed his military education as his class Honor Graduate.

Yet over 30 years later, he discovered that his own son, Curtis, was undergoing a similar ordeal at the very same academy solely due to his Jewish heritage. This in turn led him to found the Military Religious Freedom Foundation to help protect the Constitutional rights of service members such as Curtis Weinstein, Jeremy Hall, and Don Larsen, who have been harassed, threatened, and assaulted because of what they did or did not believe about god.

Officers Boykin’s and Welborn’s very words exposed their profound ignorance about the U.S. Constitution that they swore to uphold, and there are many more like them. For all the extensive education provided them at public expense, they somehow graduated without being able to comprehend the words, “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances” which comprise the First Amendment to our federal Constitution. Nowhere in that document does it proclaim the United States a Christian nation or require that citizens must believe in any god. Even if Boykin and Welborn and other U.S. military officers and enlistees who would force their religious beliefs on others spoke every word of their oaths with great fervor, including “so help me God,” they apparently had little comprehension of what they were saying. By their subsequent actions to undermine religious freedom, they have shown contempt for the U.S. Constitution, as if it were a mere scrap to be trampled underfoot and thrown into the trash. Clearly they need a rude awakening to the reality that they took an oath to support, defend and bear true faith and allegiance to that very scrap, this nation’s highest law and basis of the rights of all citizens and anyone who falls within U.S. jurisdiction, even Jews, Muslims, Wiccans and atheists, not merely Christians, and certainly not any god.

...if you provide for the First Coast Freethought Society in your Will.

Your bequest will ensure that the FCFS continues to be a beacon for freethinkers on the First Coast and to remain a vital Voice of Reason in the Northeast Florida area. Several options are available for establishing a bequest (specific, percentage, residual, or contingent). We will be happy to provide the appropriate wording to you and your attorney, depending upon your wishes.
